Choose Your Plant's Form

Shrubs grow 3-4 feet tall and look great in groups or rows

Rose trees get 4-7 feet tall, and look great near patios, doorways, or the corners of your home.

Choose The Size of Your Knock Out Rose

Larger varieties bloom faster & get established quicker in your landscape. Be sure to order well-developed 1 or 2 gallon plants if their available.

Avoid tiny quarts or liners- they'll take years to give you any color.

Where to Plant your Knock Out Roses

These plants look great as a row or hedge. You can plant them along sidewalks, driveways, or patios.

Landscape designers like to plant these in odd numbers-you commonly see them in groups of 3 or 5.

Rose Trees are commonly seen near a home's entrance, around the back patio, or in the center of garden beds.

How to Plant your Knock Out Roses

Here's what you'll need: shovel, wheelbarrow, Transplant Fertilizer

Make sure to space your roses at least two feet apart for increased air flow, disease prevention, and aesthetics. Place your roses where you want them to be planted and view them from several angles to make sure that is the location you want for them.

Begin digging your hole. Be sure to dig twice as wide and twice as deep as your rootball. This allows you to mix in any new soils and fertilizers into the hole. You'll want to plant your rose at the right height compared to what it currently has in its container.

Carefully remove your plant from its container. Be sure to break up the roots with your hands (do not use a spade or garden tool since this can damage your plant's roots).

Place the plant in the hole. Back fill the hole with fertilizer, native dirt, and nutrient-rich soil so that the plant's height is the same as it was in the pot. When filling your hole with native dirt, be sure to break it up with your fingers.

Water your rose thoroughly. Make sure there are no air pockets in the dirt, since this can cause your roots to dry out.

Pruning your Knock Out Roses

We recommend pruning your roses to get max blooms, good form, and symmetry.

Begin pruning in late January or mid-February. Waiting any later will delay your spring blooms.

Dip your pruners in bleach or rubbing alcohol to prevent any diseases to form during your cuts.

Use the "Two Foot Rule". Whatever size you cut the rose back to, it will grow back two feet that season. If you want your Knock Outs to be four feet tall this season, cut your bush down to two feet.

Cut all healthy shoots back by no more than half. Cut out any interior growth and take out any canes (the spindly branches) that are overlapping with healthy branches. Your rose bush will stop focusing all its energy on foliage and spend more time focusing on bloom production.

During summer, trim off the "Three D's": dead, diseased and damaged wood.

Property Value

Attractive landscaping can increase your property value by as much as 15%, so it is important to have colorful, low-maintenance plants. These are easy to grow, repeat bloomers, so you get plenty of bang for your buck with Knock Out Roses.
